MAY BE CLUE TO MURDER MYSTERY

Companion of Hazel Myers, York Springs Girl, Dies Leaving Letter Contents of which are Supposed to Deal with Murder.

Leaving a letter, the contents of which, it is believed, may throw some light on the death of Hazel Myers, the York Springs girl who was murdered near Carlisle several months ago, Mrs. Brinton Harry died at the Cumberland County Home on Friday. She had been an inmate of the institution since Wednesday.

Mrs. Harry was Laura Funk, before marriage, and she was a boon companion of the York Springs girl whose mutilated body was found in an abandoned house after what is supposed to have been a night's debauch in a resort near Carlisle.

At the time of the murder the authorities were unable to get any information from Laura that would throw light or tend to throw some on the murder of Hazel Myers. Some believed, however, that she knew something about the tragedy, which first came to public notice May 23, just two months from Thursday.

Immediately after the death of Mrs. Harry on Wednesday, it was reported that she had left a letter for Carrie Stevenson, also a friend, stating that if Carrie thought she (Laura) would not recover she was to open the letter which, it was believed, would throw some light on the murder. It was claimed that the woman was afraid to open the letter on account of its possible contents.

When interviewed Mrs. Stevenson claimed the letter was not for her but was for a Carlisle man. Its contents have not yet been learned and police and others who have been following the murder mystery are very curious.

Apparently the Cumberland County authorities are no nearer making an arrest than they were the day the murder was discovered.

PAUL BORTNER

Dies Shortly After Operation for Appendicitis in York Sanitarium

The sudden death on Friday of Paul S. Bortner, a young conductor of the Hanover and McSherrystown Street Railway, after an illness of less than two days, was a shock to his many friends.

He had been a conductor on the line for only the past three months, and worked until Wednesday evening, when he was taken ill with violent pains in the abdomen. The severe pain was soon checked, although on Thursday he was unable to work. Thursday evening the family physician found that he was afflicted with appendicitis and an obstruction of the bowels. He was rushed to the West Side Sanitarium of Dr. Edward W. Meisenholder, in York, on the midnight car, where he immediately underwent an operation. He never recovered, however, as his death followed at 6 o'clock in the morning.

The funeral will be held in Hanover on Tuesday morning.

UNION PICNIC

The program of entertainment at the union picnic, Kurtz Playground, next Wednesday, will start with a base ball game between two of the Sunday School League teams at three o'clock. SUFFRAGISTS GET MANY FOLLOWERS Gettysburg and County Workers Claim that Numerous Adherents are Coming to their Cause as Result of Campaign.

That the recently organized suffragists of Adams County are highly gratified with the success which has attended their campaign during the past few weeks, is the statement made by those intimately connected with the work. The district superintendents have been quietly at work, distributing suffrage literature, talking to their friends and gradually working up a strong sentiment in favor of the movement.

The entire county is covered by the organization effected at Gettysburg several weeks ago and, with the continuation of the systematic work now in effect, it is believed that the voters will be ready, when the time comes, to declare themselves a large majority for equal suffrage.

Some of the district superintendents are not asking those in sympathy with the movement to sign the slips which declare their allegiance to the cause but will wait until the spirit is still further crystallized to do that, at which time they expect to make an exceptionally fine showing. Others are getting individual signers daily. All report the great majority, if not actually for suffrage, at least strongly interested in it and willing to be convinced.

The county committee now plans to secure a speaker of national reputation to address a mass meeting here in the near future. It will be held at a convenient place and will be well advertised so that it is believed a large attendance will result.

Local suffragists are much interested in the news that the Pennsylvania Suffrage Executive Committee met this week in Harrisburg and decided to work for one day, August 15, at something besides their pet projects in welfare, club or suffrage work. This day is to be known throughout the country as "Self Sacrifice Day for Suffrage."

"You know," said the president, Mrs. Frank M. Roessing, "after our home duties the next thing in importance during this and next year, is the progress of suffrage, and we work constantly for its success in 1915."

The happiest solution of the "labor problem" for that sacrifice day came in an inspirational flash of friendliness toward the newspapers; and the Executive Committee of the Pennsylvania Woman Suffrage Association will become reporters on a limited number of the state's big daily newspapers from sunrise to sunset. Salaries will vary, but whatever the amount, it will be paid by the worker directly to Miss Jane Addams, at Hull House, Chicago, who is treasurer of the big national Woman's Sacrifice Fund.

The entire fund will be spent in extensive work in the six states in suffrage campaign this year.

LIST HEARING FOR BRODBECK

Matter of Post Office Appointment will be Heard Next Week. Brodbeck Wanted Immediate Hearing. Cite Postal Investigation.

Hearing on charges brought Friday before the senate postoffice committee that the post office appointment at Delta, York county, was commercialized and that Edward C. Peeling named as postmaster at York, was unqualified, was postponed until next week, notwithstanding that an immediate hearing was demanded by Representatives Palmer and Brodbeck. The charges were brought by Jere S. Black, of York, Democratic candidate for lieutenant governor in 1906, and Lemon Love, former sheriff of York county.

Headed by Senator Vardaman, of Mississippi, the senate postoffice committee sat Friday to hear the case. Representatives Brodbeck and Palmer appeared and demanded an immediate hearing. Owing to the failure of the complainants to put in an appearance, however, the hearing was postponed.

Congressman Brodbeck was prepared to call the committee's attention to the fact that these same charges were made before and had been disposed of by the postmaster general at the time, when the latter had a thorough investigation made by a postoffice inspector in York county with the result that the charges were entirely disproved. The postmaster general at that time, in March of this year, did the unusual thing of giving a statement to the newspapers of the entire country. In this statement the postmaster general said:

"A careful investigation of these charges has been made by an experienced postoffice inspector with the result that Hon. A. R. Brodbeck and his secretary, Mr. C. A. Geesey, have both been completely exonerated and all but one of these postmasters, namely, the one at New Freedom, were likewise absolved of blame."

In his letter to the committee Lemon Love says: "That A. R. Brodbeck, our congressman from this district, made various appointments of postmasters in this district in consideration of the appointee's agreement in writing to pay certain money to one Allen M. Seitz, then the Democratic county chairman of York county, and Mr. Brodbeck's agent and representative. My theory is that Mr. Brodbeck having proven venal in the distribution of patronage, is unworthy of credit and no appointee of his ought to be confirmed."

While the committee did not proceed with the hearing, Representative Palmer took occasion to protest vigorously against the "senatorial courtesy" policy which, involved by Senator Penrose, is holding up the confirmation of a dozen postoffices in Pennsylvania, including one in Mr. Palmer's district and the two in York county.

CITIZENS TO SWEEP

Unusual Plan to Keep Hagerstown Streets Clean.

Because all street sweeping in Hagerstown has been suspended by reason of the failure of the Mayor and Council to select a tax collector, leaving the town without funds, all citizens of Hagerstown are called upon to meet in the public square Saturday night, at 10 o'clock, to be formed into street-sweeping squads and give the streets of the city a complete sweeping, according to a program mapped out at a meeting of the Board of Trade.

Every person is invited to join the ranks, armed with a broom. Prior to beginning of operations, the sweepers will be regaled with lively airs by the Silverline Band. Merchants and property owners are requested to sprinkle in front of their properties to keep the dust down to a minimum. Carts will follow the volunteers and remove the refuse as fast as it is swept up. One merchant has already contributed two dozen brooms for the work.

ULSTER PARLEY UTTER FAILURE

Asquith Tells Commons Fight Must Go On in House.

CIVIL WAR SEEMS NEAR

Orders to Mobilize Reported to Have Been Sent to Carson's Volunteers in Ireland.

London, July 25.—King George's efforts to bring peace in the home rule warfare and avert civil war in Ireland have failed.

Premier Asquith announced in the house of commons that the political leaders who participated in the four conferences at Buckingham Palace had been unable to agree on the area to be excluded from the operation of the home rule bill.

Orders for the mobilization of Sir Edward Carson's Ulster volunteers are reported to have been flashed to Ireland as soon as the premier made the announcement that brought the greatest crisis that has yet developed.

No hope of further peace negotiations was held out by the premier. He said that the conferences had been ended, thus confirming the belief that prevailed when the meeting of the conference adjourned. Fears that civil war is near were intensified by the premier's announcement.

The galleries of the house were filled when the premier arose and virtually every member was in his seat. The premier went directly from a cabinet meeting to the house, his wife and daughter accompanying him.

The premier's statement follows: "The possibility of finding an area to be excluded from the operation of the Irish home rule bill was considered, but the conference, unable to agree in principle or in detail on such an area, brought its meeting to a close."

"That is the report made, Mr. Speaker, by the chairman of the conference to the king," he added.

Mr. Asquith then announced that second reading of the bill to amend the Irish home rule bill would be taken on July 28.

The premier was invited to inform the house as to the exact differences of opinion which had prevented the attainment of a settlement by the conference, and in reply said: "I can make no statement on the subject at the present moment." The house then adjourned.

Except among the extreme radicals and labor members, who are opposed to a conference of any kind, it is felt in parliamentary circles that the meetings of the political leaders in Buckingham Palace have done much good. It was pointed out that they had shown how far the opposing Irish parties would go and that this would assist the government in reframing its bill to amend the home rule bill.

A leading Liberal said: "There is no reason to assume that the last word has been said. The government probably will proceed to embody in the amending bill the results achieved at the conference as far as they go, and these, added to their own concessions, can then be thrashed out in parliament."

James Keir Hardie, Socialist and Independent Labor member of parliament, in an angry attack on the king in a Labor paper, accuses the king of calling the conference in the interest of the reactionary and rebellious Ulsterites. Among other things he says: "The king is not a pleasure-loving scapegrace, as his father was, but, like his father, he is destitute of even ordinary ability. Born in the ranks of workers, his most likely fate would have been that of a street corner loafer."

SHOT WITHOUT WARNING

Town Clerk Killed Son-in-Law Suddenly, Witnesses Say.

Haverstraw, N. Y., July 25.—Witnesses who saw William V. Cleary, town clerk and political leader, kill Eugene B. Newman, his young son-in-law, in Cleary's office, testified at the coroner's inquest that Cleary fired shots at Newman before the boy had said a word.

Josiah Felton, a county supervisor, declared that young Newman entered the county clerk's office and took a seat in front of Cleary's desk. The town clerk turned around, the witness said, and remarked: "You think you've put one over on me." Then without warning, according to Felton, Cleary drew a pistol and opened fire.

Cleary says he killed Newman because he thought he wronged his daughter and did not know of their secret marriage a week ago. It was brought out that his wife told him of the marriage a few hours before the tragedy.

RED ARMY WINS SHAM BATTLE

The Encampment at Selinsgrove Ends Today.

Selinsgrove, Pa., July 25.—The encampment of regulars and state militia broke camp today. The soldiers began entraining shortly after noon and by tonight all will have left.

The big sham battle was won by the Red army. Colonel F. M. Stillwell's Thirtieth infantry, of Scranton; Major William H. Stroub's separate battalion and the Third squadron of cavalry left their bivouac in the hills after a heavy shower and came back to camp.

The Ninth infantry, of Wilkes-Barre, under Colonel Dorrance Heynolds; the regulars and the Sheridan and Governor's troops remained in bivouac all night.

By a peculiar coincidence the orders issued constituted the forces which retreated from bivouac as the Red army. However, Colonel Stillwell, in command of the Red forces in the battle, repelled the taunts of the Ninth infantry, for the Ninth and Thirtieth are bitter rivals, of being "candy soldiers," and outfought and outgeneraled the Blue forces, under command of General Reynolds, which remained in bivouac.

Even the regulars were forced to retreat when Major E. H. F. Conrad, in command of the First battalion of the Thirtieth infantry, charged the Union cemetery, located on a high eminence, where the regulars were slaughtering hundreds of the Reds from their cover behind the monuments and tombstones.

SAY MAN KILLED MRS. BAILEY

Counsel For Woman Accused of Murder Says He Has Perfect Alibi.

New York, July 25.—A sensation was sprung in the mystery surrounding the murder of Mrs. Louise Bailey in the office of Dr. Edwin Carman at Freeport, L. I., when it was learned from authoritative sources that the defense of Mrs. Florence Carman, who has been indicted for the killing, will be that the murder was committed by a prominent Long Island society man.

George M. Levy, attorney for Mrs. Carman, declared that he had perfected an alibi for Mrs. Carman and that it would show conclusively that a man fired the shot that killed Mrs. Bailey.

Bans Near Beer in Georgia.

Atlanta, Ga., July 25.—The temperance committee of the Georgia state senate has voted unanimously to report adversely a bill to legalize the manufacture and sale within the state of beer containing not more than four per cent of alcohol. The measure was opposed by the state temperance organizations. The sale of "near" beer is now legal in Georgia.

ROOSEVELT AGAIN ATTACKS BARNES

Will be More Caustic Than Ever, Says Colonel.

HIS ANSWER TO LIBEL SUIT

Declares It Is Positive Proof "Bosses" Recognize In Him an Enemy to Machine Government.

New York, July 25.—Colonel Roosevelt made reply at Oyster Bay to the $50,000 libel suit of William Barnes, the summons in which was served on him, by a renewed attack on the Republican state committee's chairman.

The writ is based on a statement by the colonel attacking Mr. Barnes and Charles F. Murphy, the Tammany leader, and endorsing Harvey D. Hinman's candidacy for the governorship.

The colonel said he would not be deterred by the suit from attacking Mr. Barnes, but, on the contrary, he would assail him the harder. He expressed the hope that he would have the opportunity to go on the witness stand against Mr. Barnes before the November election.

To make clear what he meant, the former president, who was in a fighting mood, dictated this statement:

"I'll do all I can to help hurry forward the suit."

"I regard the action of Mr. Barnes as the most striking proof that could be given that the bosses recognize in me personally the one enemy that they stand has to fear, and further more recognize that the most dangerous menace to the present system of bi-partisan politics in this state is contained in the movement to elect Mr. Hinman as governor on a non-partisan ticket, which I hope will contain the names of such anti-machine Democrats as Mr. Hennessey, as well as Progressives and anti-machine Republicans."

"I shall continue with increased aggressiveness to attack Messrs. Barnes and Murphy and the kind of machine politics which they typify, which I hold must be eliminated from the state."

When Mr. Barnes saw the colonel's statement he said: "The question involved in this matter is only whether he tells the truth."

He was reminded that the colonel had declared that he could prove everything he had said.

"Well, that's what we're here for," he replied, "But we are not going to discuss it here. We will discuss it in the courts and under oath."

Trial of the suit will be held in Albany county, Mr. Barnes' home, unless the colonel gets a change in venue.

The Republican chairman professes to be anxious for a speedy trial of the case and, through his lawyer, James S. N. Ivins, indicated that he wished to have the issue settled on its merits before October.

"If Mr. Roosevelt wishes to adopt obstructive tactics," Mr. Ivins said, "the trial, of course, can be delayed for a year and a half or two years."

"Mr. Barnes remarked to me while he was going over the papers that Mr. Roosevelt had done the unusual thing last year by suing a Michigan editor who had called him a drunkard. He added that he was simply following the precedent then established by the former president."

SUES MORGAN ESTATE

St. George's Episcopal Church Seeks Accounting of Trust Fund.

New York, July 25.—Suit against the trustees of the late J. P. Morgan's estate was filed by St. George's Episcopal church, of this city, of which Mr. Morgan was senior warden. The church seeks an accounting of the income of a trust fund of $600,000 bequeathed to it by Mr. Morgan and left to the care of the diocesan convention of New York. The convention was made co-defendant.

The complaint alleges that of the $24,000 a year income due the church less than $1400 has been paid. A proper construction of the will of Mr. Morgan with reference to this fund is also sought.

CARDINAL GIBBONS.

Roman Catholic Prelate in Good Health on 80th Birthday.

© 1914, by American Press Association.

Cardinal Gibbons celebrated the eightieth anniversary of his birth at the home of T. Herbert Shriver, at Union Mills, near Baltimore. In appearance the cardinal looks younger than before he left for his visit to Rome several weeks ago, and he said his health was extremely good. He is still more active than most men who are twenty years younger. Many letters of congratulation were received at his residence. Some of them were from the highest dignitaries, not only in Rome, but also in America and Europe. The above is from a photo of the cardinal taken a week ago on his return from abroad.

MEXICAN FACTIONS DRAWING TOGETHER

All Profess Desire For Peace in Republic.

Washington, July 25.—Direct advice to the United States from Provisional President Carranza, General Carranza, General Villa and Emiliano Zapata—the four chief elements in the Mexican problem—renewed the hopes of officials here for peace in the war-torn republic.

The program for peace in Mexico, according to officials, is:

A declaration of a complete armistice within a few days between General Carranza and Provisional President Carranza.

Signing of an agreement between the two forces for an amnesty and guaranty for the protection of life and property.

Dissolution of the present congress and re-assembling of deputies and senators elected under President Madero, whose terms do not expire until next September, but who were dissolved as a body by Huerta.

Resignation of Carranza to the Madero congress and designation by the latter of Carranza as provisional president under the constitution.

Conference of chiefs in Mexico City, including representatives from General Carranza and Villa, for the formulation of a reform program for the new administration.

Huerta Through With Mexico.

Kington, Jamaica, July 25.—General Huerta and General Blanquet, formerly Mexican minister of war, landed here and went to the Bank hotel.

The former president was dressed in white, while General Blanquet was in the uniform of a general of the army.

General Huerta, who appeared to be in good spirits, said in answer to a request for an interview:

"I cannot give an interview. I shall go from Kingston to Spain direct, and from the latter country will proceed to Germany. I am through with Mexico. I believe anarchy will continue to reign in the interior of the country."

BECKY FUDGED. STRIKE'S OFF

Hunger Striker Secretly Indulges In Lemon and Water.

New York, July 25.—Rebecca Edelson, the I. W. O. agitator, has broken her hunger strike at Blackwell's island and will not be forcibly fed, according to an announcement made by Commissioner of Corrections Katherine Davis.

Miss Davis said she had learned that the prisoner had eaten a lemon and been drinking water for some time.

Forced to Wed, Ends Life.

Williamsport, Pa., July 25.—After being missing for three days, the body of Mrs. Stanley Papka, twenty-three years old, of Union township, who three weeks ago became a bride against her wishes and to please her parents, was found in a well near her home. It is believed she became so unhappy that she committed suicide.

KATHLYN WILLIAMS

In these extraordinary days you read a living drama of Love and Danger and Intrigue that enthrall you from the start. You read of the hair breadth escapes of the most daring motion picture actress in the world, the beautiful KATHLYN WILLIAMS, leading lady for the Selig Polyscope Co. You read of her being lured by a false message from her father's peaceful home in California. You follow her before the Council of Three in the Royal Palace of Allaha, crowned the unwilling Queen of a wild race of people in the midst of the jungles of India.

You read how she is bound by fanatical natives on the top of a giant funeral pyre and hear how the flames creep ever nearer her helpless form. You read of her tied with thongs in a tiger trap as human bait for the blood thirsty beasts of the jungle. You read of her swimming for her life to escape a maddened water-buffalo in the black waters of a Bengal river. Time after time, in scene after scene, this actress takes her life in her hands and walks grimly up to the very jaws of death in order to portray with life-like realism the actual adventures of MacGrath's heroine. It all makes a wonderful story.

Wallingford In His Prime

By GEORGE RANDOLPH CHESTER

Copyright, 1913, by the Bobbs-Merrill Co.

CHAPTER XXIX.

The Gentle Art of Being Dore.

"MURDER!" exclaimed Wallingford, pleased and yet shocked that his plans had worked so extremely well. "Why, you are trying to take advantage of what you consider to be my necessity." Mr. Spoozer was not indignant, merely hurt in his tenderest feelings. "You are most unjust," he complained. "I am only correctly gauging the market value of the stock to your monopoly. I have labored to obtain it for you, and the laborer is worthy of his hire."

"A hundred and twenty-five isn't laborer's profit; it's robbery," protested Wallingford.

"Tut, tut!" chided Mr. Spoozer, with angelic forgiveness of that harsh charge. "You offered my friend Putnam as high as $110, and young Mr. Martin, who was anxious to buy my stock to sell to you at a profit, offered me $105. The price, Mr. Wallingford, is $125. At that quotation I am really conferring a benefit upon you."

"I appreciate it," conceded Wallingford dryly. "How much is thirty-five times $125?"

"Four thousand three hundred and seventy-five dollars," replied Mr. Spoozer promptly, glancing at some figures on his desk. "Here is the stock." And he drew forward the neat little pile that had reposed just before his eyes.

Wallingford opened his checkbook, and the mild eyes of Mr. Spoozer took on the passing expression of twin needles.

"Of course they will not sell stock to you at the factory," he conjectured, watching hungrily as Wallingford counted out the money and noticed thirstily that the subtraction of this amount made almost no impression upon the sum total.

"Not a share," laughed Wallingford. "They know who I am and what I want. Moreover, I don't imagine the new assistant manager would sell to any one who would sell to me."

"Possibly not," mused Mr. Spoozer. "I have heard that Mr. Daw is a very curious person."

He paused now as his fingers touched the money, and nothing more was breathed by either gentleman until he had counted it three times and felt each bill and held it to the light.

"If I should obtain some of my stock I suppose you would be in the hardware market for it," he suggested after he had deposited the money in his pocket and twirled the knob about nine times.

"At the present moment," declared Mr. Wallingford, with a trace of indifference, "there is nothing I desire so much as to have every share of the Bessmer stock taken away from Mr. Daw."

"I have understood that there was a deplorable personal feeling in this matter," commented Mr. Spoozer, grieving over the selfish passions of men. "Jim Hodders, who has the brick contract for the new Bessmer building, told me that you were bitter business rivals."

"We are even more than that," stated Wallingford, with every appearance of truthfulness.

Blackie Daw, who had in perfection what is known as the healer's touch, was extracting with a huge magnet an iron filing from the eye of a fellow workman when Eli Spoozer called, and he positively refused to talk business in the emergency hospital, which he had fitted up in the neglected pattern room back of his desk. The workman came out with him by and by, bandaged and smiling gratefully.

"Mr. Spoozer's still waiting to see you, Blackie," observed Bessmer. "He's outside in the grinding room."

"The grinding room," replied Blackie softly. "Is exactly the place for Mr. Spoozer." And Bessmer, thinking he understood that joke, gave it full acknowledgment.

"I wish to talk with you quite in private, just by our two selves," began

Mr. Spoozer, with kind playfulness, drawing Blackie off into a corner. "Come over here then," invited Blackie, solemnly leading him into another corner that was no particle more secretive. "Now, what can we do for each other?"

"You might enable me to increase my little investment in this establishment—that is, if you made the price of the stock low enough," suggested Mr. Spoozer, with the air of one conferring a favor.

"I haven't much to sell," Blackie told him, looking decidedly uncomfortable. "I couldn't possibly let go of enough to weaken Mr. Bessmer's control of the company."

Mr. Spoozer was shocked that he should even conceive such an idea. "No one, I am sure, would wish to injure Mr. Bessmer, who is a very honest, hard working business man. He has the respect and even affection of the entire community, including myself. If you chose to sell any of the stock, how much would you want for it?"

"Par," announced Blackie affably. "My dear young man," expostulated Mr. Spoozer in stern but kindly tones, "the stock has never been worth more than 50 per cent, and I'll guarantee and there's so much of his money in that safe I dodge every time I pass it. He only took a hand bag with him. Did he swindle you out of anything?"

"Well, no," admitted Mr. Spoozer reluctantly.

"Then don't go around saying it," ordered Curly, and walked away in silent contempt.

The merriment in the festively lighted yard of the Bessmer Malleable Process company was at its height when Eli Spoozer, learning that Wallingford had gone straight there from the 9 o'clock train, repaired to the scene of the festivities.

A big table, built in the form of a hollow square, spread with a snowy cloth and decorated with carnations, champagne pails and whole roast pigs, to say nothing of chickens and such minor articles of inner comfort, filled the yard, and at the center of the head table, flanked by Wallingford on one side and Bessmer on the other, stood Blackie Daw in his blackest Prince Albert, making a farewell speech to his many friends in and out of the factory and inviting them, one and all, to move to Tarryville, so that they could vote for him for mayor or on the reform ticket in the coming fall.

It was all very reassuring to the only man in Oak Center who could command over $100,000 cash, and when the final applause had subsided the new assistant manager would sell to any one who would sell to me."

"Possibly not," mused Mr. Spoozer. "I have heard that Mr. Daw is a very curious person."

He paused now as his fingers touched the money, and nothing more was breathed by either gentleman until he had counted it three times and felt each bill and held it to the light.

"If I should obtain some of my stock I suppose you would be in the hardware market for it," he suggested after he had deposited the money in his pocket and twirled the knob about nine times.

"At the present moment," declared Mr. Wallingford, with a trace of indifference, "there is nothing I desire so much as to have every share of the Bessmer stock taken away from Mr. Daw."

"I have understood that there was a deplorable personal feeling in this matter," commented Mr. Spoozer, grieving over the selfish passions of men. "Jim Hodders, who has the brick contract for the new Bessmer building, told me that you were bitter business rivals."

"We are even more than that," stated Wallingford, with every appearance of truthfulness.

Blackie Daw, who had in perfection what is known as the healer's touch, was extracting with a huge magnet an iron filing from the eye of a fellow workman when Eli Spoozer called, and he positively refused to talk business in the emergency hospital, which he had fitted up in the neglected pattern room back of his desk. The workman came out with him by and by, bandaged and smiling gratefully.

"Mr. Spoozer's still waiting to see you, Blackie," observed Bessmer. "He's outside in the grinding room."

"The grinding room," replied Blackie softly. "Is exactly the place for Mr. Spoozer." And Bessmer, thinking he understood that joke, gave it full acknowledgment.

"I wish to talk with you quite in private, just by our two selves," began

"Well, you see," hesitated Blackie, looking mournfully about the shop and over at Bessmer's office. "I like this business, and Bessmer, and the men, but I'm a poor person, and to sell out at par would mean a big profit on my investment. I wouldn't sell to Jim Wallingford, though. I don't think he'd even come to me to buy it."

This being the strict truth, Blackie had a perfectly clean conscience when he said it.

"I'll take those fifty shares at par," Mr. Spoozer slowly observed, after thinking a long, long time. "If I were you I would not say anything to Mr. Bessmer about it just now. Suppose I come over tonight and see you at your hotel."

"Make it tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock," amended Blackie. "I am not coming to the shop tomorrow forenoon."

Mr. Spoozer was busy writing him out a check. "Here is $5,000 for your fifty shares," he stated, holding it with both hands for impressiveness. "Just think how little those fifty shares cost you and how much profit I am giving you! Multiply that by the balance of your stock and think it over!"

"I don't like to leave this place," mourned Blackie. "I'm teaching two of the boys over in the shipping room to dance the double clog."

Mr. Spoozer returned to Wallingford's hotel triumphantly.

"I can get fifty shares of that stock," he announced, delighted to give Wallingford so much pleasure, "but you'll have to raise the price to $135."

Wallingford eyed him with a secret sorrow that he was doing the man no harm. "It's extortion!" he protested.

"I can't get it for you for less," declared Mr. Spoozer, seemingly sad that such was the case.

"I don't believe I want it at all," suddenly decided Wallingford.

"Why not?" demanded Spoozer in breathless fright.

"Because you have only fifty shares of it. My instructions are to obtain control, and I'm beginning to be discouraged about it."

"You buy this fifty shares at the price I named, and I'll tell you some good news," promised Eli, with exultant playfulness.

"Do you mean that you can get all of it?" asked Wallingford eagerly.

"I believe that I can," jubilated Eli and rubbed his hands over and over each other.

"Then I'll pay you $135 for this fifty with pleasure," and Wallingford jerked out his pocketbook.

Mr. Spoozer was sorry he had said that he could obtain merely the fifty shares, for he had the certificate in his pocket. However, he had made it an early motto that if he could not entirely avoid evil he would avoid all appearance of evil.

"I'll be back in ten minutes," he stated. "You'll be right here, won't you?" And he eyed Wallingford's pocketbook anxiously.

"Right here," Wallingford assured him.

Mr. Spoozer was back in nine minutes and a half. "If I can obtain the remainder of that stock I don't think it will be necessary to raise the price above $135," he suggested, being quite certain that this was the limit that Wallingford would pay.

"I should say you would not raise the price!" retorted Wallingford. "I may be careless, but I don't mean any harm to myself."

"Will you pay $135?" Spoozer wanted to be assured.

"I will pay $135 a share for every share of Bessmer stock that you sell me from now on," Wallingford truthfully answered.

Mr. Spoozer waited until sharp 10 o'clock the next morning, when he was ushered into Mr. Daw's rooms. He found that gentleman freshly shaved and completely dressed, except for his silk hat, and sitting behind a table studiously poring over a handbook on the art of molding and casting.

There ensued a most lively conversation, in which Mr. Spoozer pointed out to the young man that he must not fly in the face of Providence by refusing the handsome fortune that lay at his door.

On his part Mr. Daw had conscientious scruples about allowing the controlling stock to pass into any owner's hand that might be inimical to the interests of Mr. Bessmer, but in the end he fell. He stifled his conscience and sold to Mr. Spoozer at $100 a share his entire interest in the Bessmer Malleable Process company.

"But I didn't know you had so much stock," protested Mr. Spoozer. "Bessmer only had 1,250 shares to dispose of in the first place. I bought fifty of those from you, and here you are offering me 1,315."

"I acquired a few more," explained Blackie. "The certificates are all here, new issues made out to the last night and duly signed by the president and secretary."

"The more the better," granted Spoozer after a little thought, and added twice more to make sure the total shares represented by the certificates. He produced his checkbook.

"You'll have to come across with genuine money," observed Blackie before the purchaser started to write.

"I had to be identified to cash that other check of yours, and I don't like to have bankers look at me as if they think me a suspicious character."

"You don't want cash for this amount?" protested Mr. Spoozer. "It's entirely irregular. Why, man, it's $131,500."

"I can carry that much," Blackie boastfully assured him. "Feel my muscle."

"I know, but the banks won't like it," worried Mr. Spoozer, who was as well acquainted as any man on earth with the reluctance of real money to be moved about.

"If we do it the other way I won't like it," Blackie serenely argued. "I'd like to accommodate the bankers well enough—they're nice men—but they

"You'll have to come across with genuine money," observed Blackie.

never seem to want to accommodate me. No; it'll have to be cash, Mr. Spoozer."

"Well, I'll see if I can get them to honor the checks," reluctantly granted Mr. Spoozer. "But we have to go to all three banks."

"As many as you like," consented Blackie most amiably. "I'll assign you these certificates before we go."

"I don't know about that," hesitated Mr. Spoozer, but Blackie was already writing the assignments upon the backs of the certificates as carelessly as if he were inscribing his room number on a bar check.

"You keep the certificates awhile, then," Spoozer cautiously directed, and when they were down in the lobby he called up Bessmer.

"Is Mr. Daw all right?" he wanted to know.

"I'll vote for him," stated Bessmer, "and I'll know all the men in the shop will back him."

"He wants to sell me 1,315 shares of stock in your corporation."

"I am sorry," replied Bessmer, with genuine regret, "but they're his shares. He paid cash for them, and he may do with them as he likes."

"But how did he get so many?" "Bought them."

Mr. Spoozer considered. "Then I can't get stung if I do business with him?" he ventured.

"I didn't, and I don't see how you can," Bessmer emphatically assured him. "Those shares are worth $100 apiece."

"I'll carry those certificates now, Mr. Daw," Mr. Spoozer kindly offered.

Blackie took them out of a little wooden box, and Mr. Spoozer leaped through them to see that they were all there. They bulged his inside coat pocket mightily, but he did not mind. He went with Blackie to the three banks and persuaded the much pained gentlemen in charge to relinquish, collectively, $131,500 in genuine United States currency; then he and Mr. Daw parted.

The latter gentleman dashed into the express office, next to his hotel, and inquired how soon they would put packages in a car headed for New York.

"In just thirty-five minutes, Blackie," replied the express agent. "What's in this box?"

"Oh, a lot of souvenir junk I'm sending home," answered Blackie carelessly. "Regular valuation; not to exceed $50."

Meanwhile Mr. Spoozer, with an athena face, was being informed that Mr. Wallingford had left the city. Mr. Spoozer's first thought was swift, direct and natural to his mind. "The awindler!" he gasped.

"Who said so?" demanded Curly Washburn. "I'll tell him that when he comes back."

"Is he—Is he coming back?" begged Spoozer, breathing with renewed hope.

"Of course he is!" stated Curly indignantly. "He has a trunkful of clothes here that I wish he'd leave behind, direction of the concern for the next ten years."

"That's one of the reasons my monopoly did not care for the stock," snively explained Wallingford, chuckling about something or other.

"It's a swindle!" yelled Spoozer, purple with rage.

Blackie Daw arose and confronted him, pale with outraged indignation. "A repetition of that charge and I shall sue you for libel!" he warned.

"Put him out!" shouted the expressman indignantly.

Seven men arose to their feet, and then the whole crowd got up. Spoozer did not wait.

"Gentlemen," said Blackie Daw, bowing his thanks, "will some one kindly hand me my saxophone?"

THE END.

REJECT AS TRAP CAILLAUX NOTES

Famous "Affinity" Letters Are Shelved by Court.

THEY MAY NOT BE READ

Counsel For Both Sides Handled Them as Though They Were Infected With Poison.

Paris, July 25.—The famous letters which passed between Mme. Henrietta Caillaux and Joseph Caillaux—the publication of one of which caused the murder of Gaston Calmette, editor of the Figaro—may never be read in court, although they are in the possession jointly of the counsel for Mme. Caillaux and of counsel for the Figaro estate.

When Mme. Berthe Gueydan, Caillaux's first wife, who admits she took the letters from Caillaux's desk, had them in her possession there was a great demand on all sides for their production, but now seemingly nobody wants them read in court or submitted to the jury.

Counsel for both sides handled the letters as though they were infected with poison.

"I do not care what you do with them. Publish them all if you wish to do so," declared Mme. Gueydan.

"These letters will never be read by me," cried Fernand Labori, Mme. Caillaux's counsel. "Does Mme. Gueydan want them back?"

"No," replied Mme. Gueydan.

"Well, then, no one shall have them except myself. If you have heard of me being caught in a trap you are mistaken," said the lawyer.

Maitre Labori appeared to regard Mme. Gueydan's seeming reluctance of Thursday and her impulsive consent that he should have the letters as a device to place him in the position of either suppressing the letters or of reading them to the disadvantage of Mme. Caillaux. He asked her again: "Madame, do you wish to take back these letters?"

Madame Gueydan: "No, sir."

Maitre Chenu: "Give me the letters to tear them up."

The procurator general, Jules Herblot, reminded Judge Albaladejo that he could reject any testimony not pertinent to the case.

Judge Albaladejo then interrogated Mme. Gueydan as to her wishes. She said:

"I repeat that Maitre Labori may do what he likes, in connection with Maitre Chenu, with the letters."

Maitre Labori called M. Caillaux to the witness stand and asked him his views on the matter. He said to him: "I suggest that you confer with Mme. Caillaux on the subject."

M. Caillaux turned his head toward his wife in the prisoner's dock and she nodded assent. M. Caillaux then said: "I consent."

The judge disposed of the question for the time being by saying that the letters would be confided professionally to M. Chenu as representing Mme. Gueydan and to Maitre Labori, as representing Mme. Caillaux.

Before Mme. Gueydan had reached court Pascal Cecaldi, the most intimate personal and political friend of M. Caillaux, was called to the stand.

M. Cecaldi addressed to the jury an impassioned defense of the Caillaux family. He described Mme. Caillaux's efforts to restrain her husband from assuming political power, as she was of the opinion that his keeping out of the government was the only way in which they could expect to have peace in their life.

MARINES HEADED FOR HAITI

Government Orders Force Rushed to Guantanamo.

Washington, July 25.—Preparing to intervene in Haiti, the government ordered the transport Hancock, now at Norfolk, to rush to Guantanamo with her marines for possible service.

State department officials said that the Haitian situation has grown much worse, and that if the loans of European creditors are to be guaranteed the United States will be forced at once to land marines, either at Cape Haitien or Port au Prince and assume control of the affairs of the island republic.

The battleships South Carolina and Connecticut, the gunboat Sacramento, the collier Caesar and the transport Prairie are in Haitian waters.

Four Children Burn in Home.

Taylor, Wis., July 25.—The four children of Richard Roberts, a widower when the home caught fire while the father was away. When Roberts arrived the home was enveloped in flames and desperate efforts to rescue the children failed, many villagers and Mr. Roberts being painfully burned. The oldest child was a boy twelve years old, and the youngest was three years old.

Loosened Propeller Tip Rips America's Plane Covering.

Hammondsport, N. Y., July 25.—The tearing of a copper tip on the America's right propeller put a halt to tests until repairs can be made to the trans-Atlantic flying boat.

While Lieutenant Porte, the pilot, was drying the hydro-aeroplane over Lake Keuka, seven miles north of the hangars, the propeller tip became loosened by the force of the drive and tore away a portion of the plane's silk covering. The flying boat carried a little less than her trans-Atlantic cargo.

The optimism consequent to Thursday's successes, when the America flew with a third engine, was overshadowed by the accident, which may result in the postponing of the cross-ocean attempt until October, although this has not been definitely decided.

Lieutenant Porte has said that if the America was not shipped to St. Johns, Newfoundland, by next Friday, the attempt would not be made for three months.

The America, equipped with the third engine, planned on Lake Keuka on Thursday. Her total weight was approximately 6100 pounds, a little more than she will be required to carry when she leaves Newfoundland for Plymouth, Eng., by way of the Azores and Spain.

Queer Things That Turn Up in the News

Rats chewing the mortar for years caused a New York sewer built in the thirties to collapse.

John W. Roberts of Dover, N. J., risked his life by returning to his burning home for his false teeth.

Because people stayed away from East Alton (Mo.) Baptist church for lack of clothes trustees urged members to wear simplest possible garb to service, suggesting overalls for men and house clothes for women.

Dan O'Leary and Henry Schmehl, both aged seventy-one years, who forty years ago walked a famous race from Chicago to Joliet, Ill., repeated their race, clipping five minutes off their record of 8 hours 30 minutes. The distance is about forty miles.

RING IS PUT ON TOE OF ARMLESS BRIDE.

While in Another Odd Case Armless Bridegroom Signs Name With Teeth.

"Names, please," said Deputy City Clerk Maher in the Brooklyn marriage license bureau when a couple appeared before him for a license to wed.

"Charles Gornell," spoke up the man. "Marie Lorrano," said the girl.

They both gave their ages as twenty-four and said they lived at Coney Island.

After the clerk had filled out the blank he turned to the bride elect and said:

"Hold up your right hand and swear that the statements herein contained are true."

There was an embarrassing pause, and then one of the party exclaimed that his order could not be carried out, because the bride was armless.

"I don't suppose you can sign the certificate?" he asked dubiously.

"Oh, yes, I can, too," cried Miss Lorrano, and, kicking off her right shoe, she grabbed the penholder in her toes and dashed off her signature.

Alderman John S. Gaynor married the couple. When the proceedings reached the stage where the declaration is made "With this ring I thee wed," the armless lady presented her left foot, which was incased in a glove like stocking.

On the same day there appeared before Deputy Clerk William Corbitts of Yonkers, N. Y., Oscar Fried of North Broadway, Yonkers, who has no arms and two crippled legs as a result of an electric shock. He took out a marriage license to wed Miss Hilda Dahlgren. He used his teeth to sign his name.

Fried was terribly burned a year ago, and his wedding was deferred indefinitely. Miss Dahlgren, loyal to him, has waited patiently.

Recently Fried was awarded $75,000 for his injuries. Justice Morschauer ordered him to take $55,000 or go to trial for the third time. His counsel is appealing from the order to the appellate division.

ROBINS HEAD THE LIST.

First Government Census Shows There Are 100,000,000 East of the Mississippi.

Approximately 2,020,000,000 native field birds, exclusive of sparrows, inhabit the United States east of the great plains states, according to partial results announced of the first bird census in the history of the government, now being made by the department of agriculture. Apparently the most numerous of these birds is the robin, of which, it is estimated, there are 100,000,000 east of the Mississippi river. They average fifty pairs to the square mile, while all field birds average 1,000 pairs to the square mile after omitting land planted in crops where there are small chances for birds to nest and in timber land.

These early returns of the census indicate there are wide variations in the bird population in different parts of the country. Chevy Chase, Md., a suburb of Washington, reports the most numerous bird life thus far, with an average of about seven pairs per acre. Only a few places report as high a population as four pairs per acre.

The most extensive census of birds in forest land, which supports a much smaller population than an equal area of farm land, comes from Montana, where the careful counting of nearly a thousand acres showed an average of one pair to each three acres.

Asparagus Souffle.
Hashed Veal.
Baked Potato Cakes.

BLACKBERRIES are delicious, whether served fresh or in a dainty dessert like one of those suggested here:

Light Summer Desserts.
Bread and Blackberry Pudding.—Spread some pieces of stale bread with butter and arrange it in the bottom of a pie dish. Pour over this stewed blackberries and when cold serve with a custard sauce.

Blackberries may also be added to a batter pudding and will give it a delicious flavor.

Blackberry Flummery.—Soak a cupful of tapioca in cold water till it is soft, then cook in boiling water with sugar. When cool add freshly picked blackberries, stir together, pour into glasses, garnish with berries and pile whipped cream on top.

Blackberry Farina.—Take a quart of stewed blackberries, a cupful of farina and a dash of salt. Heat the blackberries with their juice in a double boiler, then add the farina, stirring it in gradually, and cook for about fifty minutes. Put it into wet molds to harden. When cold slice and serve with sugar and cream.

Fruit Fillers.
Blackberry Fritters.—Make a batter of one pint of milk, one egg, one table spoonful of sugar, one teaspoonful of baking powder, one cupful of flour and a half teaspoonful of salt. Into this batter stir lightly two cupfuls of blackberries. Drop the batter by the table spoonful into boiling fat and serve the fritters with liquid sauce.

Chartreuse of Blackberries.—Take two heaping table spoonfuls of powdered gelatin and into a saucepan add a cupful of water, strained juice of one lemon, one cupful of sugar and four eggs, slightly beaten. Stir over the fire until the mixture thickens. Strain into a basin and when cool add two cupfuls of whipped cream. Pour into a wet ring mold and allow to set. Turn out and decorate with whipped and sweetened cream and plenty of ripe blackberries.

THE OTHER WOMAN'S INFLUENCE

I have seen a love demanding
Time and hope and tears,
Chaining all the past, exacting
Bonds from future years;
Mind and heart and joy and sorrow,
Claiming as its fee:
That was Love of Self, and never,
Never love of me.

"To love, and not be loved is time lost," says the poet; to which another adds naively:
" 'Tis better to have loved and lost, than never to have loved at all."
The maiden who loses a fickle lover
declares there were never such woes as hers. The wife who has bartered
her future happiness for a name and a ring
at the altar, with the expectation that it would bring her lifelong devotion and happiness, and has seen her air castle tumble, fickle love take wing, knows that there is no grief more pitiful to endure than hers. The maiden can look elsewhere with expectation of meeting a heart mate. The wife has burned all her bridges of romance behind her. She has been a faithful, loving, conscientious helpmeet, economical to a fault, turning and mending her clothes until there was scarcely a thread left of them, always meeting her husband with a cheerful smile and a kiss, a slave over her household duties from morning till night, happy in the thought that all her sacrifices are for his dear sake, and yet to note a growing coldness on his part is a thorn in her peace of mind, which grows in strength and sharpness until it pierces her heart to the core. She ruminates carefully over the many possibilities that cool a husband's love and cause him to become dissatisfied—a nagging wife—a spendthrift—a married flirt.

She conjures up everything, anything save the true reason which induces him to find fault with her over mere trifles; why he, who used to be so generous in their early married life, cuts down their allowance for household expenses, to the least possible penny; seldom speaks to her save with sarcasm; refuses to take her out for an evening's pleasure, allows the taxes on their home to accumulate, coolly informing her he does not intend to pay and she might as well move, sell everything and go back to her folks.

And he passes more weeks away from home than in it, refusing her all information as to where he was or why he remained away. Even the woman most blinded by wifely love and devotion realizes that there is something wrong—somewhere.

The husband who is brutally frank, throws off all pretense at this stage of the game and openly confesses that he is a backslider from love, faith and duty; that it is better for them to go their separate ways. He points out to her that it is useless for her longer to cling to a heart upon whose hearth the warm glow of affection has died out.

Although he does not admit it in so many words, yet a flash of the truth comes to her.

His fickle heart has strayed from its allegiance to her. Even then she makes excuses for him to herself.
He has been lured away from her against his will. All wives should know that they have a strong hold upon a husband's honor which she of his idle fancy has not.

Even though a man tears his wife rudely from his heart because of some other attractive influence which holds him for the time being, yet he who is false to one woman can never be entirely true to another.

She in turn, loses her hold for a fresher fancy. There comes an hour in all such men's lives when they would cast the tinsel from them for the heart of pure gold that they flung aside. It's only a question of time until he repents, seeing his folly, and returns to the heart and home of the one love which proved strongest, truest and best.

AN APARTMENT IN THE CLOUDS

Owner to Live on Fortieth Floor of Building.

DAY LIFE IN SKYSCRAPERS.

Equitable Building In Course of Construction In New York's Financial District Will Be Abiding Place by Day of 12,000 Souls—Figures Show Remarkable Congestion.

To many wonderful things that exist in New York, but which to the average New Yorker are matters of commonplace interest, is soon to be added an apartment which will be higher than any other habitation in the world.

This will be the home of Frank W. Woolworth, who is going to establish a suit of rooms on the fortieth floor of his great office structure, which towers to a height of fifty-one stories.

The eye in the clouds, for such it will be, as the apartment will be far removed from the humdrum life of the sidewalk crowds, will unquestionably rank as the most desirable of the city's thousands of desirable costly housing accommodations. Situated 700 feet above the level of the sidewalk, higher than all but one of the very tall buildings, the Woolworth apartment will have unobstructed views of all the city, and as for light and air, no other suit extant will equal its facilities.

The tower section of the Woolworth building, which occupies the block front on Broadway between Barclay street and Park place, has an area of 3,600 square feet, of which about 2,500 feet, the size of a standard city lot, are available for use, the remainder being for walls, partitions and elevator wells.

May Be Permanent Residence.

The home in the skyscraper will probably be utilized only as a resting place during business hours, but its establishment will direct the thought of persons interested to speculating that it may solve the problem of unrented spaces in tall buildings which could be adapted for similar purposes when they fail to rent for the business as originally planned. The merchant who pays close attention to details, and for that reason finds it hard to wean himself away from his commercial duties, may be induced to reflect on possibilities of duplications of such accommodations, but probably they will not become numerous.

However, the apartment directs attention to occupancy of great skyscraping office buildings. For instance, one of the numerous signs surrounding the new Equitable building, in course of construction in the financial district, tells that it will be the abiding place by day of 12,000 souls. That number of human beings, as most any schoolboy can tell, equals the population of many large towns and some cities as well.

An interesting phase of the estimated population of this huge structure—which is to cover a square block of 50,000 square feet and with a usable area of 30,000 square feet on every one of its thirty-six floors bounded by Broadway, Cedar, Pine and Nassau streets—is that it will have, like any municipality, its own police force, waterworks, hospital, recreation centers and other departments.

No other structure in New York equals the new Equitable in size, the nearest to it being the Woolworth building, with 11,000 inhabitants.

These figures are interesting to the student of housing conditions who has devoted research in the direction of cheap tenement houses. The congestion in the latter is greatly overshadowed by the population of skyscraping office buildings. In proof of this might be mentioned the report of the Charity Organization society a few months ago, which stated that in 122 blocks on the east side lived 312,000 souls, a population larger than that of a dozen of the leading cities of the United States. But a more specific comparison between the tenements and office building population as regards congestion was given in the same report relative to one block near the Williamsburg bridge, in whose tenements approximately 5,000 men, women and children, principally babies, were huddled.

Congestion Is Considered.

The congested condition of the financial district in the matter of office building population has been duly considered in connection with the restriction of construction by President McAneny of the board of aldermen, who has stated upon advice of competent experts that further multiplication of them would make impossible transit in subways at the morning and evening hours because of the great mass of population that pours in concentrated numbers out and into the big buildings at these hours.

Mr. Woolworth's proposed apartment will doubtless long be without a parallel, unless one be established in either the Singer or Metropolitan tower, which has a great height, but even should one be set up in either building, which affords the nearest approximation to the Woolworth building, it would not be higher than the Woolworth suit, for that will be 700 feet up, while the extreme height of the Metropolitan is 700 feet and the Singer tower 612 feet.

Women Witnesses Criticized.

Judge Lush-Wilson, K. C., remarked at Exeter (England) county court to a woman litigant who continually interrupted: "Madam, I run the risk, I know, of criticism from your sex when

Crockford's Wife

By SADIE OLCOTT

One day a man named Crockford went to his bank, drew $500 and was about to go out when he stopped and said to the paying teller:

"Look right over my shoulder. You see that young Italian looking fellow with a striped waistcoat and felt hat with a fancy band? Well, when I got through counting the money you paid me I turned suddenly and caught the fellow looking at the bills with a covetous expression on his face. You know that there are a lot of robberies committed by persons seeing some one draw money from a bank."

"Why don't you call a policeman to see you home or wherever you are going?"

"Because I don't believe I shall die till my time comes, and when it does nothing can save me."

The disappearance of Stephen Crockford was one of the great mysteries of the close of the nineteenth century. The police had a very strong clue, but were unable to follow it. A bank clerk gave them the incident that has been told above, and they did not doubt that the Italian had murdered Crockford, but when or where or what had been done with the body they failed to discover. The only other clue in the matter was furnished by Mrs. Crockford. Her husband when coming home from the city often made a short cut over a path through a wood. She searched the wood and in a part so thick that few ever went into it she found the remains of a fire, and some wood corded near had visibly diminished. In the ashes she found some bits of bone and burned flesh. She picked up also an unburned piece of a man's cuff. This she took to a laundry where her husband was used to having his collars and cuffs laundered, and the mark on it was identified as having been put on a cuff belonging to the missing man. This, indicating that the body had been burned in the thicket, ended the information concerning the disposition of Mr. Crockford's body. The police, getting no further clue, gave up the case.

Crockford was financial man for Englehart & Co., Importers of Japanese goods. Mrs. Crockford after her husband's disappearance went to the head of the firm and asked for a position by which she might support her self. She was taken into his private office, where she was informed that a sum was missing from the firm's cash and her husband was suspected of having taken it. He had been seen a day or two before his disappearance in company with a blond woman not his wife. Mr. Englehart believed that Crockford was not dead, but had fled with the blond woman.

On hearing this recital Mrs. Crockford fell on the floor in a faint. So great was the sympathy of Mr. Englehart that he agreed to employ her on the books, she having some knowledge of bookkeeping. She became the assistant of John Hardwick, who had been her husband's assistant. Since the latter's disappearance Hardwick had been promoted to be the financial man of the firm.

A year passed, during which nothing was heard of Crockford. Mrs. Crockford was complained of by Hardwick for inefficiency several times and at last notified the firm that she must leave or he would do so himself. She was informed of the fact and told that since Hardwick was an excellent accountant and willing to work for a mere title of what he was worth they had decided that she must go. She asked to be kept till the end of the month, and her request was granted.

One evening Mrs. Crockford telephoned Mr. Englehart that Hardwick was a defaulter and about to take to flight. She begged that Hardwick be arrested or kept in sight. Englehart discredited the information, but put a watch on Hardwick.

The next morning who should appear at Englehart & Co.'s office but Mr. and Mrs. Crockford. They begged to be admitted to the private room of the head of the firm, and there they let in on his brain a flood of information.

Shortly before Crockford disappeared he told his wife that Hardwick was a defaulter, but had trapped him (Crockford) into a position wherein there was excellent evidence that he was the thief. He was every day expecting arrest.

Mrs. Crockford arranged for her husband's disappearance. She dined with him at a public restaurant made up with a blond wig and enameled complexion. She was the Italian who had taken the wood that had disappeared and burned most of it in her fireplace. With the rest she burned some pieces of meat and bone. The cuff she had partly burned and rubbed the remainder in ashes. Her fainting when informed of her husband's villainy and infidelity was feigned. She had asked for a position with a view to destroying the evidence Hardwick had cooked up against her husband and getting evidence in turn against Hardwick.

The lady who had executed this delicate work was presented with a handsome sum by the firm, and her husband was put back in his position.

The police, who had been beaten in their own detective field by a woman, were incredulous of the explanation they received. As to the courts, in which Crockford would have been convicted if tried—courts do not feel.

I say that they are the most troublesome people I have to deal with. Why can't you women exercise the same amount of self-control in the witness-box as men have to do?"

Training Outweighs Long Service

There is no better proof of this than the every-day scenes of long service, untrained employees at the beck and call of younger men who occupy the big positions because of their training. It's a case of Training vs. Long Service—with the odds in favor of the trained man.

Get out of the untrained rut. Mark and mail the attached coupon and let the I. C. S., of Scranton, tell how you can qualify for a better position. How you can protect yourself against servitude in your old age. How you can become an expert at your chosen line of work.

That the business of the I. C. S. is to Raise Salaries is shown by the monthly average of 400 letters voluntarily written by students reporting salaries raised and advancement won through I. C. S. help. No necessity for leaving home. No books to buy. Marking the coupon puts you to no expense and places you under no obligation. Mark it NOW.
